This 400+ acre forested upland trail system has a decent climb to and from the ridge. It's a good idea to take a photo of the map at the trailhead and watch the signs along the loop trail—it can be easy to get turned around in these dense woods. It's a great place to spot wildlife and woodland birds such as woodpeckers and thrushes. In addition to hiking, the loop trail is popular with cyclists, horseback riders and hunters (for safety, all trail users should wear fluorescent orange garments during hunting season and check Washington Department of Fish & Wildlife regulations).
