An easy day hike that's great with or without the kids. Interpretive signs depict plants used by Native Americans, food sources for birds, and non-native invasive plants. At the top of the South Hill trail is a fun amphitheater used by the local elementary school, which makes a great picnic spot. A little farther around on the nature trail, find a viewing platform overlooking a thriving beaver marsh. The trails meander through the woods with the occasional muddy area or downed tree, but it's well-maintained. There are nature identification signs and posts with directions marking every junction.
